Brit College celebrates in the sunshine

London 17th June 2013

Brit College has opened its picturesque new Limehouse Campus at Limehouse Lock, on Commercial Road, E14, with a formal ceremony involving Jim Fitzpatrick MP and a host of dignitaries from industry, commerce, education and the diplomatic service.

There was certainly an air of celebration at the campus as staff and students joined their esteemed guests for a celebration on the banks of the Regents Canal. Jim Fitzpatrick MP unveiled the memorial plaque and formally declared the Limehouse campus open for business.

In his earlier address the MP had explained that he fully understands the immense contribution made by international students to UK economy, and that he will continue to lobby government in making our highly regarded educational opportunities more accessible to genuine applicants wishing to study in the UK. In response, Musaddiq Ahmed, Chief Executive of Brit College noted that 'numerous studies have shown how genuine international students are assets for British's economy – providing up to £8bn annually. Uncertainty over government policy means that students are increasingly attracted by our competitors such as the USA, Canada, Australia and Ireland'.

Jim Fitzpatrick commended the College noting that it has been an independent education provider operating since 2006. Brit College offers accredited post graduate and undergraduate courses including Business, IT and Law, Accounting and Management. Over 5,000 students have benefited from the College, with many back for this special event. In his address, Professor Andrew Jones, Principal, commented that 'Brit College is proud to invest in education with its new campus, facilities and professional staff. We encourage our students, the local community and government to invest in education as a stepping stone to future prosperity'.
